Beef Herd Nutrition Planning

Tuesday 19th and Thursday 21st September 2023

An online CPD workshop

Synopsis

This course will cover the key practical aspects of nutrition and feeding management in the beef herd and highlight how these can be used as indicators of health and performance. It will also include common nutritional issues and how to manage these, as well as case study examples.

Course content:

- Nutritional terms and overview of rumen digestion
- Forage and feed evaluation – what to look for on a silage analysis and feed labels
- Suckler cow nutrition including feed management and troubleshooting alongside case studies
- Growing and finishing cattle nutrition including feed management and troubleshooting alongside case studies

Speakers

Lorna Shaw completed her MSc in Ruminant Nutrition at Harper Adams shortly before joining SAC Consulting in 2022. Previous to this she worked within a commercial feed company as a sales representative covering ruminant compounds, meals and blends. Lorna works within the SAC livestock specialist team as a ruminant nutritionist with a focus on all aspects of beef and sheep nutrition and production. Lorna has delivered nutritional workshops and training sessions to vets, farmers and consultants, these sessions are practical, and theory based and provide a better understanding of nutritional needs of the beef herd. Lorna specialises in ration formulation and practical advice with a passion for getting the best results on farm for both stock and the business.

Karen Stewart is a Ruminant Nutritionist within the Livestock Team at SAC Consulting. She has in depth technical knowledge in beef and sheep nutrition with a particular interest in suckler cow nutrition. Having worked for an animal feed manufacturer in a previous role she has a good understanding of the feed industry and maintains close connections. With this knowledge she supports SAC Consulting staff in their network of offices across Scotland, gives advice to farmers (one to one and groups), delivers technical talks and writes articles. Karen has been involved in the facilitation and delivery of nutritional workshops and CPD courses as well as carrying out Government funded projects. She has a practical approach to her presentations to engage a range of audiences, including farmers, vets and students.
